

When it came to thinking about what I wanted to do for my senior project it turned out not to be that hard to find. Two things that I am passionate about in my life are sports and technology. So when I got to thinking how I could intertwine the two it all played itself out. I played soccer all of my life up to college and then whenever I quit I picked up technology and web design/development. Well it just happens to be that the prestigious World Cup is happening this summer, so why not make a website about the World Cup. Including all the groups, schedules, standings, teams, and venues.

Here is the resulting outcome of all the work I put into the page. The color of the page came from the inspiration of the Brazilian national colors of yellow, blue, and green. This is the home page and as you can see it has a slider on the front including two images that link to the stats and teams of the tournament. Below that are icon buttons that include the schedule, tables/fixtures, the countries, and stats. The featured teams are randomized carousel that picks 5 teams to display out of the 32 teams in the World Cup. At the bottom is a blog about the latest news happening about the World Cup.

The tables/fixture page also includes the groups and the teams but they show the standing of each team and how they are doing. It also shows the matches played, won, draw, loss, goals for, goals against, and the total points in the group. The top two teams in each group advance into the next round.

Here is the home page for all the 32 teams in the tournament. It shows their countries flags all in alphabetical order and as you hover over the image the country name appears over the flag.

Date	Time*	Venue	Match
6/15/2014	12:00 PM	Rio de Janeiro	Argentina - Bosnia
6/16/2014	3:00 PM	Curitiba	Iran - Nigeria
6/21/2014	3:00 PM	Belo Horizonte	Argentina - Iran
6/21/2014	6:00 PM	Cuiabá	Nigeria - Bosnia
6/25/2014	4:00 PM	Salvador	Bosnia - Iran
6/25/2014	3:00 PM	Porto Alegre	Nigeria - Argentina

On the team page it shows a lot of information about each team. First off there is a small slider on the left that rotates between the country flag and the countries logo. It then tells you how each team made it to the World Cup and then a lot of facts about the team like their ranking in the world, nickname, top scorer, how many times they won the World Cup, etc. And below that it shows the group they are in and their schedule.

Lastly the venues page has a slider at the top of about 3-4 images of the stadium. It shows the exact location of the stadium in google maps and then it gives a brief history of the stadium. Then there is a sidebar to the right of all the stadiums to click on.
